INTRODUCTION.

By the REV. DAVID KING, LL.D.

The value of the Scriptures, and the duty of perusing them, appear from many considerations. We may estimate the character and tendency of divine revelation, by contrasting the condition of countries where its "true light shineth," with that of other countries to which its beams have not extended. The heathen world is large enough, surely, for experimental proof. In many of its territories the richest blessings of sun and soil are enjoyed in abundance, and there external nature presents itself in its stateliest and loveliest forms,—but where are the beauties of holiness, where the fruits and flowers of moral culture? Or, if these are disparaged in comparison with intellectual stature and idolized genius, where are the distinguished philosophers and orators, historians and poets of pagan communities? Amid numberless diversities of condition, they seem to have only this in common to explain their wretchedness—that they want those oracles of God which have been committed unto us; and the conclusions appear fairly deducible, that it is in the absence of the Scriptures the people are there destroyed for lack of knowledge, that spiritual ignorance, in addition to its proper maladies, has there entailed mental and civil prostration, and that scoffers in our native land owe to the emancipating influence of God's word that very freedom of thinking which, with ungrateful and impious hand, they wield for the overthrow of its doctrines and institutions.

The cases of Greece and Rome, so famous in the annals of history for literary attainments and heroic exploits, may be urged as evidence to the contrary. But all their civilization left their religion unimproved. Eminence was restricted to a proficient few, while the millions were hopelessly consigned to "abominable idolatries." Philosophers themselves entertained the most unworthy and confused conceptions of man's relation to God, and the duties it involves,—their precarious conjectures scarcely amounting to a creed, and exercising little influence over their own practice. Unnatural crimes abounded, and were committed without shame. The places of public amusement were "habitations of horrid cruelty," soaked with the blood of unpitied captives; and even the temples themselves were consecrated to unnameable pollutions. While, then, the history of these countries shews that the impediments created to the advancement of learning by the want of revelation may, in some rare cases, be so far surmounted, it also demonstrates most forcibly the utter insufficiency of reason, even in its best estate, to regenerate the depraved heart, and reclaim a world lying in wickedness to the knowledge of God and the observance of his laws.

If we confine our attention to those countries which possess the word of God, a comparison between that portion of the community by whom the Scriptures are perused and that portion too numerous, alas! by whom they are neglected, will conduct us to a like conclusion. No doubt external propriety may, in many instances, be promoted by the simple circumstance of dwelling among Christians who are "living epistles of Christ Jesus, known and read of all men:" and it is not less certain that many may consult the records of truth, and yet hold that truth in unrighteousness. But these apparent exceptions do not invalidate the general and incontestable fact, that the classes most conversant with God's word are most distinguished for the graces which it inculcates; while they who "consort with thieves and partake with adulterers, who give their mouth to evil, and frame deceit with their tongue," are the "wicked who hate instruction and cast God's word behind them."*

In the history of the Church itself, its most prosperous periods will be found to have been those in which most attention was directed to the revealed will of God. We read of an awakening among the Jews in the time of Nehemiah, shortly after the return from the Babylonish captivity: and as copies of the Scriptures were not then so plentiful as now, "all the people gathered themselves together as one man into the street that was before the water gate; and they spake unto Ezra the scribe to bring the book of the law of Moses, which the Lord had commanded to Israel. And Ezra the priest brought the law before the congregation both of men and women, and all that could hear with understanding, upon the first day of the seventh month. And he read therein before the street that was before the water gate, from the morning until mid-day, before the men and the women, and those that could understand: and the ears of all the people were attentive unto the book of the law."† In connection with this rehearsal of scripture, we read of mourning and weeping for sin, a renewed observance of abandoned and almost forgotten institutions, and all conducing to "very great gladness."‡ It is well known that during the ages of Papal ascendancy, the general population had no access to the oracles of God. The Bible, besides being a rare and costly book, was sealed to the European communities who could not understand the original, and were denied a translation into their vernacular tongue. And what was the consequence? These were times of feeble intelligence, and hideous corruption—ages emphatically "dark," in the absence of that rejected Word which is a "light unto the feet and a lamp unto the path." At last a day of amendment dawned: and whence emanated its incipient beams? About the year 1507 Martin Luther found, in the monastery of Erfurt, a Latin copy of the Bible lying in the library. By an eager and diligent perusal of it he soon became familiar with its contents, and his studying of that Bible was the commencement of the Reformation. Throughout all its stages, that glorious epoch was distinguished by nothing more than by the reading of Scripture. Dr. M'Crie, in his Life of Knox (vol. I. p. 32), represents one copy of the Bible as commonly supplying several families, at the beginning of the Scottish Reformation: and adds, "at the dead hour of night, when others were asleep, they assembled in a private house; the sacred volume was brought from its concealment, and while one read, the rest listened with mute attention. In this way the knowledge of the Scriptures was diffused at a period when it does not appear that there was a single public teacher of the truth in Scotland."

If we turn from general history to the annals of individual experience, it is certain that the most eminent saints have been the most distinguished for consulting and revering the word of God. The inspired penmen were "holy men of God," and they evince a familiar acquaintance with the writings of one another to an extent that cannot be appreciated without careful investigation. To notice particular instances—the sweet singer of Israel was a man after God's own heart; and how largely has he embodied the contents of prior revelation in his devotional melodies, and how frequently and emphatically does he extol the diversified treasures of divine truth! The judgments of the Lord were, in his estimation, "true and altogether righteous, more to be desired than gold, yea, than much fine gold, sweeter also than honey and the honey comb."§ It was the manner of Paul to reason with unbelieving Jews out of the Scriptures, and for this appropriate and effective mode of reasoning he was qualified from "believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets."* That apostle had no man among his fellow-labourers "like-minded" as Timothy, to whom a caring for souls had become as a second nature; and if an explanation be asked of his early and signal piety, we have it in the statement that "from a child he knew the holy Scriptures, which are able to make wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus."†

The experience of saints themselves is not indeed uniform; but all its vicissitudes corroborate the same views. When God's people languish, it is because they "have forgotten the law of the Lord."‡ When they are perplexed and incredulous, they are "foolish and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken."§ When they are unduly fretful and impatient under afflictions, they have "forgotten exhortations, speaking unto them as unto children."‖ On the other hand, seasons of spiritual prosperity bespeak a reception of the truth in the love of it. If the languishing soul is quickened, it is "according to God's word."¶ If the hearts of Christ's disciples "burn within them," it is while "he talks with them by the way, and opens to them the Scriptures." If "pure minds are stirred up," it is "by way of remembrance," successive epistles having been written to induce such mindfulness "of the words which were spoken before by the holy prophets, and of the commandments of the apostles of the Lord and Saviour."†† Daniel was pondering the writings of Jeremiah when he was stimulated to present that effectual and fervent prayer, in answer to which Gabriel was sent as a ministering spirit, to assure him of being greatly beloved, and to give him "skill and understanding."‡‡ A book of the law of the Lord, found by Hilkiah the priest, was read by Shaphan to king Josiah, and proved the precursor of that godly sorrow which worketh salvation. On hearing the words of the law, the king rent his clothes, and sent to inquire of the Lord, from whom he received this response: "Thus saith the Lord God of Israel concerning the words which thou hast heard, because thy heart was tender, and thou didst humble thyself before God, when thou heardest his words against this place, and against the inhabitants thereof, and humbledst thyself before me, and didst rend thy clothes, and weep before me; I have even heard thee also, saith the Lord."§§ John was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God and the testimony of Jesus Christ, and no doubt meditating on the word and testimony for which he was exiled, when he was favoured with his celestial visions. And we too must lend our ears to hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches, and cheerfully exemplify any measure of self-denial and sacrifice required of us, in deference to those sayings which are faithful and true, if we would inherit the blessedness of those who do His commandments, and have a right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city. In this course we may still be "companions in tribulation" with the favoured disciple whom Jesus loved; but we shall also be his companions "in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ." The inheritance reserved for us in heaven will not be less secure for being remote: while we are kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation. And even now, amid the depression and gloom of this lower world, we shall enjoy, in advancing to the heavenly city, many a foretaste and earnest of its imperishable delights.

These remarks on the Scriptures have been offered in the full persuasion that a higher estimate of their own value will form the best recommendation of any reasonable aid which can be afforded to facilitate acquaintance with them. As to the subordinate means by which a knowledge of divine truth may be promoted, there can be no doubt that expositions of the Scriptures have induced many to search them whether these things be so. Still it is undoubtedly best that Scripture be made its own interpreter; and this is most happily effected by the use of a Concordance. It directs the inquirer to the words he is seeking,—enables him to examine their connection,—to find out and compare parallel passages,—and all the while follow the guidance of inspired direction. The manifold importance of such a work has caused many of the kind to be published. Omitting mention of foreign Concordances, I give some notice of those only which have been written in English. The following summary of them is collected mostly from Watt's Bibliotheca Britannica:—

The first Concordance of the New Testament was by Thomas Gybson. He represents it as "most necessary to be had in the handes of all suche as desire the communicacion of any place contayned in the New Testament." Lond. 1535. 8vo.

John Marbeck, organist of Windsor College, in the reign of Henry VIII., prepared the first English Concordance of the Bible, 1550, folio, and entituled it "A Concordance, that is to saie, a work wherein by the ordre of the letters A B C, ye maie reddly find any worde conteigned in the whole Bible, so often as it is there expressed or mencioned."

Robert F. Herrey was the author of "Two right profitable and fruitful Concordances, or large and ample Tables Alphabeticall, and will serue as well for the translation of the Bible called Geneua, as for the other authorised to be read in churches." Lond. 1578. 4to. Frequently printed.

Christopher Barker published "A Concordance, or Table, containing the principal wordes and matters which are comprehended in the New Testament. By J. W." Lond. 1579. 8vo.

It is needless to be particular about the Concordances of Thos. Wilson, a puritan divine, Francis Lucas, John Downame, Samuel Newman, Robert Wickens, Vavasor Powell,—the titles of which are given by Watt, with their size and date of publication. Some other Concordances were published which Watt does not appear to take notice of,—such as Mr. Cotton's, the Cambridge Concordance, Mr. Jackson's, and Mr. Samuel Clarke's.

In 1736, Alexander Cruden * published his Complete Concordance to the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament, Lond. and Edin. 1736. 4to. Other Concordances published since that time, such as Taylor's, Bellamy's, Butterworth's, Brown's, Baxter's, &c., have been mostly abbreviations of Cruden's valuable work, to make it more portable and extend its usefulness.

The question may be reasonably proposed, Why add another to the many works of the kind already published? In reply, the following explanations are subjoined:—A perfectly complete Concordance would be one by which any passage of the Bible might be found by any word which the passage sought for contained. But such a Concordance, though perfect in completeness, would be so large and unwieldy, as in a great measure to defeat its own utility. Accordingly, Cruden omits many of the minuter words from his columns of reference, and not unfrequently words of considerable consequence to the passages which contain them. The London edition of 1836 is before me, and selecting a passage at random, I find that the 17th verse of the 49th Psalm is vainly sought by any of the words printed in italics. "For when he dieth he shall carry nothing away: his glory shall not descend after him." See in like manner, John xxi. 13. "Jesus then cometh, and taketh bread, and giveth them, and fish likewise." Many such examples will present themselves in the familiar use of his Concordance. No doubt the passage

* Alexander Cruden was the son of a respectable merchant of Aberdeen, where he was born in the year 1701. He received a liberal education, being destined for the ministry; but in consequence of a calamity which overtook him when about the age of nineteen, he was never ordained. Few of those to whom his name is a household word, and his work a trusted guide, are aware of the circumstances under which it saw the light. All can recognise the value of his Concordance, and appreciate the patience, the labour, the power of memory, and the "genius for painstaking" implied in its production. But how greatly is our sense of this increased, or rather, how is it mingled with astonishment, when we consider the disadvantages under which so much was accomplished, when we reflect that throughout his life the author was subject to an intellectual infirmity, to overcloudings of the mind, which left him little respite! Yet this dispensation of Providence, apparently so dark, was not without its mitigations. From the power of his moral character, Cruden was both respected and esteemed by the world, despite the hallucinations under which he laboured; and in his Concordance, the fruit of toilsome nights and days, he has left a legacy which entitles him to the lasting compassion and gratitude of all Bible students.

may generally be found without difficulty by means of some other term embodied in them or their immediate context; but that just shews what I am now wishing to establish, that Cruden himself very properly proceeds, to a great extent, on the principle of harmless abbreviation. In the desire, however, to make his Concordance what it professes to be, "complete," he has crowded many pages with words of inferior moment, by which, it may be safely averred, the portions of Scripture to which they belong are seldom, if ever, consulted. In all ordinary cases, then, these supernumerary references obstruct instead of promoting a prompt and ready access to the passages desired. Might not an important service, then, be rendered to scriptural knowledge by reducing Cruden's work as much as possible in its dimensions, so as to render it less cumbrous and less costly, without materially impairing its actual usefulness? It did not appear that the design was quite satisfactorily accomplished by any of the minor Concordances already in existence. Brown's Concordance is so small as to be quite inadequate. Bagster's, by referring only to chapters and verses, without introducing any of the words, leaves the inquirer uncertain in which of all the localities referred to he is to find what he is seeking. Butterworth gives the reference, sometimes with and sometimes without quotations, thus occasioning, to a considerable degree, the same sort of perplexity; and all the other abridgments which there was an opportunity of examining, appeared liable to some such objections. Hence the present work was undertaken; and the religious community will judge how far it was required, and how far it is fitted to supply the deficiency.

As respects the plan followed, abbreviations have been made, not only by the erasure, as already stated, of superfluous references, but also by omitting explanations of words, as being more appropriate to a dictionary than a Concordance—by contracting quotations, while exercising carefulness not to obscure them—and by excluding wholly the Concordance to the Apocrypha.

As I suggested the work at first, and held deliberations with the publishers about the nature and advantages of it, they solicited me to write these introductory observations, though I had little participation in the subsequent labours. The first part was executed by a relative of my own,* and also occasional portions afterwards, amounting in all to about one-fifth of the whole. The rest is the performance exclusively of my esteemed friend, the Rev. John Eadie, of Cambridge-Street Secession Church, Glasgow.† In such a production, it may be easy to find faults or to propose amendments; but from the care which has been bestowed upon the undertaking, the strongest hopes are entertained that it will give general satisfaction, and as a humble help to the knowledge of God's word, conduce to the freedom of its course, that it may be glorified. It may be specially serviceable to ministers, preachers, and students in travelling, when they cannot conveniently carry a larger Concordance with them—to private families, who have too much regarded such an auxiliary to Biblical attainment as a concomitant of some official station—to the teachers, and even the pupils of Sabbath schools, by enabling them to compare scripture with itself, and adduce readily the passages by which its doctrines may be proved. And may He who alone can communicate saving efficacy to any means of doing good, command on this instrumentality the blessing from on high, that ignorance may be dispelled, that enmity may be subdued, and that His own Word may grow mightily and prevail.

NOTE TO THE THIRTY-SIXTH EDITION.

THE rapid sale of thirty-five editions of this Concordance has afforded sincere gratification to those by whom it was projected, edited, and published. They feel that their effort to reduce a bulky volume to the size of a convenient manual has not only been successful, but has also been widely appreciated. Their labour has not been in vain. Knowing that a Concordance is an invaluable help for the study of the Bible, the circulation of so many copies of the "Condensed Cruden" promises well, in their opinion, for the advancement of sound religious knowledge. The Word of God is its own best interpreter; and a Concordance, by its peculiar and characteristic arrangement, has no other object than to assist Christians in the instructive labour of "comparing spiritual things with spiritual." It gives them a simple means of pursuing such research with facility and speed. May it not be hoped that this Hand-book has been blessed to many in the anxious and prayerful investigation of Scripture, and that the continued demand for it may be regarded as proof of an increasing desire to gather the true meaning of the sacred oracles from a faithful and impartial comparison of their own contents?

In pursuance of the same object, and uniform with this Concordance, a "Biblical Cyclopædia" * was prepared some years ago, which has also met with an extensive circulation. It is purely what its name implies—a concise but full explanation of Biblical terms, of the names, places, persons, customs, and truths of Scripture. My aim has been to throw the accumulated results of erudition and research into a popular form, without destroying their accuracy or impairing their authority.
